

CALL FOR PROPOSALS

RHETORICS OF REPRODUCTIVE JUSTICE IN PUBLIC AND CIVIC CONTEXTS

A Special Issue for Reflections

Guest editors: Maria Novotny, Lori Beth De Hertogh, & Erin Frost

Reproductive rights in the United States are under assault from social, economic, and political mechanisms that seek to dismantle individuals' abilities to make informed reproductive choices—or any reproductive choices at all. These examples illustrate the urgency for and the possibility of community-based rhetorics that speak to, define, and make visible methods of counteraction. We seek examinations and examples of public rhetoric and civic writing that engage reproductive justice. More specifically, this special issue focuses on community activities and activism as sites of resistance.

With this in mind, we seek submissions that will serve rhetorical and public scholars of reproductive justice in helping shape and define this growing research area. We also welcome works that consider potential usage by non-academic stakeholders.

Proposals due: September 1, 2019
Anticipated publication date: Fall 2020

Please note that we are announcing this CFP early to provide researchers additional time to gather community-engaged research connected to reproductive justice.

See www.reflectionsjournal.net for more information